

The Banquet

The procession and greeting of dignitaries to celebrate the installation of the new Archbishop of Chicago.

The anarchist chef appears and pours poison into the cauldron of soup.

He stirs the pot.

Unexpected guests arrive;
the chief dignitaries confer to discuss whether to include them in the meal.

They decide to extend the soup by diluting it (and thereby diluting the poison).

The meal commences,
and all begin to eat the soup.

Soon, the poison begins to take effect and moaning can be heard...

All guests writhe in agony and fear.

With most near death, a doctor present quickly concocts and administers an antidote...
and very gradually,
all recover.

Finally, there is relief and a sense of celebration returns:

By diluting the soup in order to feed everyone, in the end, all are saved!

The Banquet

The procession and greeting of dignitaries to celebrate the installation of the new bishop of Chicago.

The anarchist chef appears

and pours poison into the cauldron of soup.

He stirs the pot.

Unexpected guests arrive;

the chief dignitaries confer to discuss whether to include them in the meal.

They decide to extend the soup by diluting it

(and thereby diluting the poison)

The meal commences,
and all begin to eat the soup.

Soon, the poison begins to take effect and moaning can be heard...

All guests writhe in agony and fear.

With most near death, a doctor present quickly concocts and administers an antidote...

and very gradually, all recover.

Finally, there is relief and a sense of celebration returns:

By diluting the soup
in order to feed everyone, in the end all are saved!